When shopping for an image-editing program, check whether the program has the ability to work with layers. These features are necessary if you are going to be doing any minor retouching of a photo or image that you are creating. If you don't have layers, you may need to purchase something that is more than just a photo-editing program. In this book, I use Photoshop CS6, but the principles of Photoshop apply to other Adobe CS and Photoshop products. A Few Digital Photography Tips Photoshop, by itself, isn't the be-all and end-all of photo-editing techniques. But with the addition of some tactics, you can vastly improve your photograph's potential. The following sections offer a few photo-editing tips and tricks. Using white balance One of the most significant problems with many digital images is that the color is too blue or too warm. This can happen because the color exposure settings are too low, the flash was used to illuminate the subject, or the image was created with a color television and not a color digital camera. Most color-correcting software programs, such as Adobe's Photoshop and Photoshop Elements, offer the ability to make an adjustment to the blue/warm color in your image to improve the overall color balance of the image. In this section, you can find out how to make adjustments to a photo's color balance. To use a white balance tool, follow these steps: 1. Open your image in Photoshop or Photoshop Elements. See Chapter 3 for help opening and closing a file in Photoshop or Photoshop Elements. 2. From the Window menu or by clicking the Adjustments panel's Filter icon, choose White Balance. The White Balance dialog box appears. You may need to scroll down to see the white balance options. 3. Make the necessary adjustments to the slider and slide away. The quickest way to adjust the white balance in an image is to use a slider to adjust the color temperature of the image. You can find more information about using a slider in your image in Chapter 5. You may also be able to click a button to choose a desired Kelvin color temperature or click buttons in the panel to get to other color temperatures. To change the White Balance option to Manual instead of Kelvin, follow these steps: 1. In the White Balance menu, click the menu arrow to the right of the Kelvin selection and select Manual.

. "Not dangerous. But he's a man under pressure. He'll crack." "You're right." Artur shook his head. "It's a risk." "He's doing what he can do. He's keeping his focus." "I hope he does. But what if he doesn't?" Tamara rubbed her temples. "Then we do whatever it takes. This is what we do, yes? We challenge the syndicates to keep us out." "Yes. But what if your—" Artur stopped. "But what if he can't?" "Then we'll work something out." "I think we're in serious trouble." After a silence, Tamara said, "We are." Artur nodded. "We are." They returned to the waiting room. Lydia's eyes were closed, her breathing was slow and even, and the doctors weren't answering the phone. They looked in on her every so often. Though she never opened her eyes, Lydia seemed to feel their eyes on her. It was something she didn't notice. Artur removed Lydia's ring and placed it in a safety deposit box. For once Tamara did not argue. The next morning they were joined by Artur's parents. Lydia's parents and Lydia's sister arrived in the afternoon. And Artur met with Dalton. Though Tamara wasn't there for the meeting, she still heard everything through her earpiece. "I understand what you're doing," Artur said to Dalton. "But these operatives aren't like the rest of the syndicates. They're not worried about hurting people. They just get their fix. They're addicted." Dalton was quiet for a long moment. "It's a terrible sickness. But I'm not going to stop." "If they don't want the syndicate to die, then they'll come back to us." "And what of Tamara? You said her role is to keep the syndicate alive." "I'm not putting her in danger. She's a professional." "And she's not in the syndicate." "You said yourself we should be helping the syndicates when we can." "I'm not going to argue with you, son." "But I—" Dalton cut him off. "I think

EU mulls firing first shot to curb the shady business of Facebook and Google The European Union's antitrust watchdog is set to begin a probe into Facebook and Google to establish whether they are unfairly promoting their businesses, the Financial Times reported Wednesday. The EU's competition authority is considering launching a case against the social network and the search giant, according to four sources familiar with the investigation, Reuters reported on Wednesday. The probe, which will be carried out by the European competition enforcer, is to be announced as early as next week, one source told AFP. The focus of the investigation is on businesses like Facebook and Google's AdWords advertising platform. A case could see the EU's competition authority to fine the firms for unfair practices, potentially the biggest anti-trust sanction the bloc has handed out. The sources said the probe would focus on charges that Google is giving its AdSense service a commercial advantage through bundling it with Android, the operating system used by smartphones. The two companies have already been hit with punitive fines by the bloc for other anti-trust violations in the past. The AdSense and Android case was originally opened in 2013 by the European Commission, but one source said that the probe had now been reopened in the wake of several major scandals at both firms. A spokesman for the commission's competition department did not reply to an email seeking comment. Facebook is accused of pressuring app developers to give it a share of revenues when their users click on ads shown to them on the social network. Google's AdWords platform is based on the same business model as Facebook but the two internet giants continue to dominate the advertising market. The EU's investigation could be as much as a year long, the sources said. The EU's two largest economies, France and Germany, along with the EU executive Commission, could hold a preliminary hearing on the matter as early as January, one source said. Washington to subsidize EU Security Agency The European Commission and its new US counterpart, the Department of Homeland Security, reached an agreement Wednesday to strengthen cooperation in fighting cyber attacks and improving the protection of US government secrets. The Commission and DHS will discuss issues ranging from cybersecurity to how they will tackle cyber threats and trade secrets. The EU executive will also transfer the EU's border agency Frontex to the Department of Homeland Security, in a deal that will also see the US agency take over the staffing of EU's
