The invention relates to a connector, and more particularly to an audio jack capable of housing a base-end-electrode portion that covers a plurality of soldering terminals. 2. Description of the Related Art FIG. 5 shows a conventional audio jack 1'. The audio jack 1' includes an insulative housing 11' and a plurality of terminal members (not shown) received in the insulative housing 11'. The insulative housing 11' has a front portion, a rear portion and a central portion at an intersection of the front and rear portions. The front portion, the rear portion and the central portion are formed with a plurality of cavities 111', respectively. The front and rear portions include a plurality of contacting portions 12' and a plurality of soldering terminal portions 13'. The soldering terminal portions 13' are arranged, respectively, in the cavities 111' and are then soldered to an audio plug (not shown) so as to achieve an electrical communication between the audio plug and the audio jack 1'. Each soldering terminal portion 13' has a base-end-electrode portion 131' soldered to the audio plug. Each base-end-electrode portion 131' has an upstanding wall 132' that protrudes outwardly from the central portion. An end edge of the upstanding wall 132' is arranged to abut a rear end of an adjacent soldering terminal portion 13'. Each base-end-electrode portion 131' has a plurality of through holes arranged at an edge portion thereof. The through holes are used for a plurality of contact members (not shown) to be passed therethrough. Due to a packaging size of the audio plug, a distance "A" between adjacent through holes is smaller than a height "C" of the base-end-electrode portion 131', as shown in FIG. 5. As a result, each through hole is liable to be blocked by a resin. To avoid blocking each through hole through 6d1f23a050
